

THANK YOU NOTES

Stories of Connectional Giving

www.iaumc.org/tyn

LAKE OKOBOJI UNITED METHODIST CAMP

Keith Shew, the director of the Lake Okoboji United Methodist Camp in northwest Iowa, tells the story of a very shy little girl who reluctantly came to Lake Okoboji. She greeted her mother with much excitement after a week at camp and asked to share a song at church the next week.

Although this was extremely uncharacteristic of the girl and even though the music leader was gone that Sunday, she whispered into the pastor's ear during the children's message that she had a song from camp that she'd like to sing.

The little girl — all by herself, into the microphone, and in front of nearly 200 people — led the entire congregation in "The Karate Song," an adaptation of "I Will Magnify the Lord" that she'd sung around the campfire the previous week.

The congregation stood and did the actions with her, exhibiting a kind of spirit that had not been felt for many years! Camp made this little girl feel loved, confident, and ready to share what she learned about God! And her zeal changed the hearts of many people!

Learn more about camping ministry supported by conference apportionments at www.okobojicamp.com.

THANK YOU NOTES

Stories of Connectional Giving

www.iaumc.org/tyn

LAKE OKOBOJI UNITED METHODIST CAMP

Keith Shew, the director of the Lake Okoboji United Methodist Camp in northwest Iowa, tells the story of a very shy little girl who reluctantly came to Lake Okoboji. She greeted her mother with much excitement after a week at camp and asked to share a song at church the next week.

Although this was extremely uncharacteristic of the girl and even though the music leader was gone that Sunday, she whispered into the pastor's ear during the children's message that she had a song from camp that she'd like to sing.

The little girl — all by herself, into the microphone, and in front of nearly 200 people — led the entire congregation in "The Karate Song," an adaptation of "I Will Magnify the Lord" that she'd sung around the campfire the previous week.

The congregation stood and did the actions with her, exhibiting a kind of spirit that had not been felt for many years! Camp made this little girl feel loved, confident, and ready to share what she learned about God! And her zeal changed the hearts of many people!

Learn more about camping ministry supported by conference apportionments at www.okobojicamp.com.

